Beet Street Farm was founded in 2016 by Brian and Stacey Petrie. After years of working on other farms in the Durango area, and a long search for their own land, they found an idyllic spot in the Animas Valley. As a blank slate of prairie dogs and weeds, they had their work cut out for them. They enlisted their old farming partner Chad Goodale and began building Beet Street Farm from the ground up.

The farm has doubled in production almost every year since 2019. Currently they grow around 7 acres of vegetables that can be found at restaurants and grocers in Durango, including: Nature's Oasis, James Ranch Market and Grill, Primi, Sage, Zia, the Ore House, Sunnyside Market, and through the Good Food Collective. They grow a diverse range of vegetables as well as cut hay off a portion of their property. This year they will also be incorporating bees, fruit, and cut flowers to their farm.

Beet Street Farm is dedicated to growing high quality, nutrient rich produce using conservation land management practices that improve soil health and increase biodiversity.

While not certified organic, they manage all their land organically.

They participated in the Roots of Health CSA last year and are excited to do so again this year. Their farm team also includes Cameron Hobbs, James Plate, Marcus Henderson, Scott Perez, and Marissa Meadowcroft.
